Social Changes in the Present Era and Beyond: Local to Global Context

Liberalization, Privatization and Globalization are the very popular and burning topic for the academicians, social institutions and society as a whole. This web of transformation became popular as the LPG policy in the later period. The globalization of the production inputs like technology, labour and capital (both intellectual and financial) invited changes in the 'base' of the society. It changes the mode of Production, marketing and distribution which intern brings changes in the 'superstructure'. Consequently human relationship and culture is redefined. These changes are not unidirectional. Sometimes, it brings positive change and sometimes negative. Even a change that affects a group of people positively may have adverse effect on the other. Especially the marginalized section of people all over the world suffers a lot in terms of their economic, political and cultural identity. Some sections among them loose their livelihood, nationality and culture. The co-existence of surplus and wastage of food along with the hunger and malnutrition is the common feature of the society. It is often advocated that the deprivation anywhere is a threat to development everywhere. But sustainable development, inclusive development still remains a policy on the paper. The poor are losing their homeland by the pressure of development extension. Labourers are exploited in the name of capital creation. On the one side, the idle capital increases the headache of capitalists on the other hand the burden of credit compels the poor cultivators to commit suicide. The agriculture input are getting rarer but at the same time the agriculture produces suffer from economic prices in the global market. Slums in the big cities are increasing, enhancing pressure on the existing infrastructure. Sometimes they are compelled to live in a vast nothingness.
