Our understanding of biodiversity conservation and environmental sustainability has been independently evolving for a long time. Evidence suggests that biodiversity and sustainability both are critical for ecosystem function and services on which humans depend, and is directly linked to the economical, social, and environmental components of sustainability. Due to the integration of research from these areas should and is becoming as priority. Started from the number of priority research allowing multidisciplinary transition and conflict to mutual compatibility between conservation and sustainability a number of new arena of biodiversity and research has come out. These are (i) ecosystem services and function provided by biodiversity, (ii) links between biodiversity, environment and poverty reduction, (iii) agriculture that promotes biodiversity, (iv) issues related to indigenous knowledge and biodiversity conservation, (v) integrative assessment of biodiversity conservation and environmental management through the development of indicators.
